What is Media Monitoring?

Media monitoring tracks the media conversation

Media monitoring is the activity of gathering the output of the print, online, and broadcast media. It is based on analyzing a diverse range of media platforms to identify trends that can be used for various reasons such as public relations, marketing, planning communications activities, and tracking the public opinion regarding a product/company/person/event etc.

Types of manually-curated newsletters:

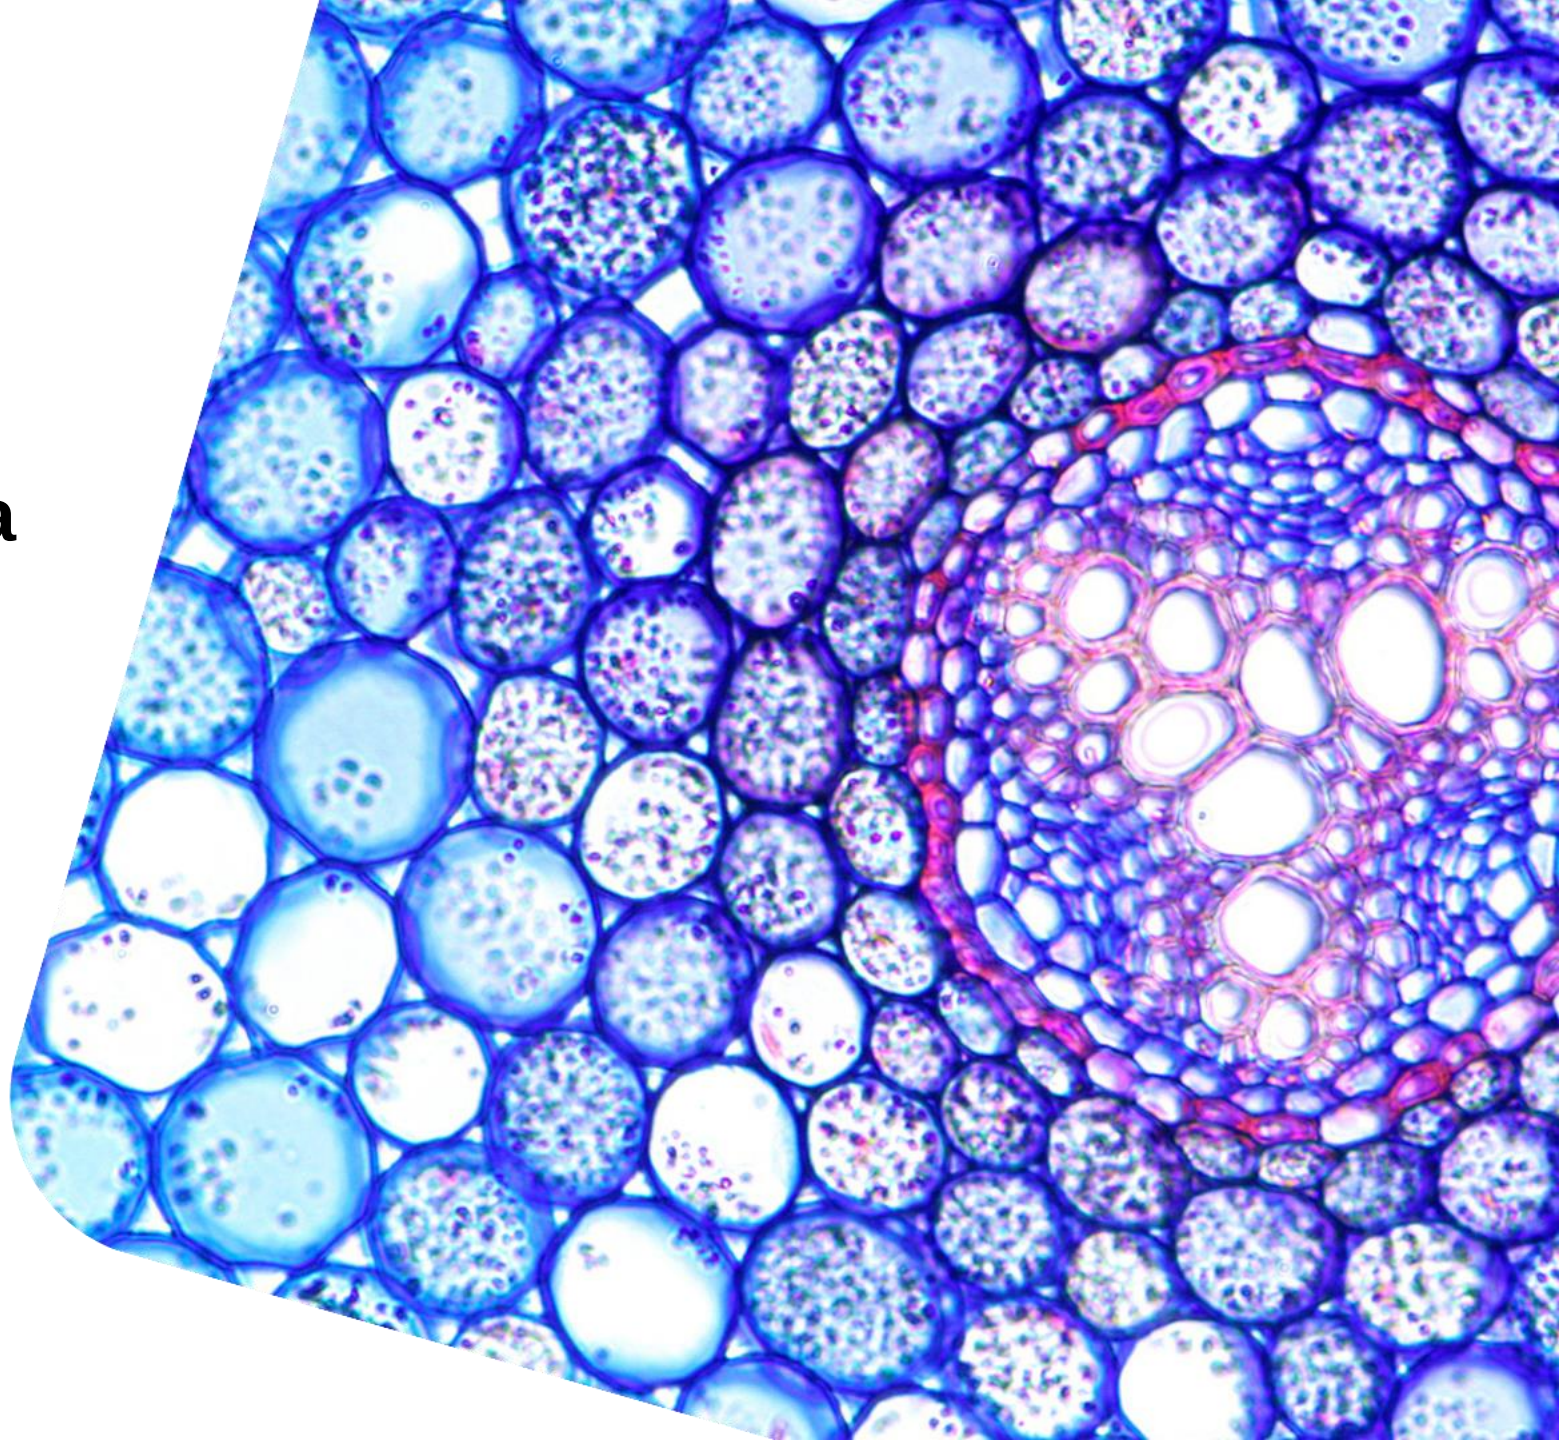

- Based on frequency: daily, weekly, bi-weekly, monthly
- Based on the type of summaries: with article summaries, snippet-style, with top-level summaries or highlights

Newsletters can vary in focus and format.

Newsletters are always client-specific and are defined by the client’s brief.

Using Cogent for media monitoring

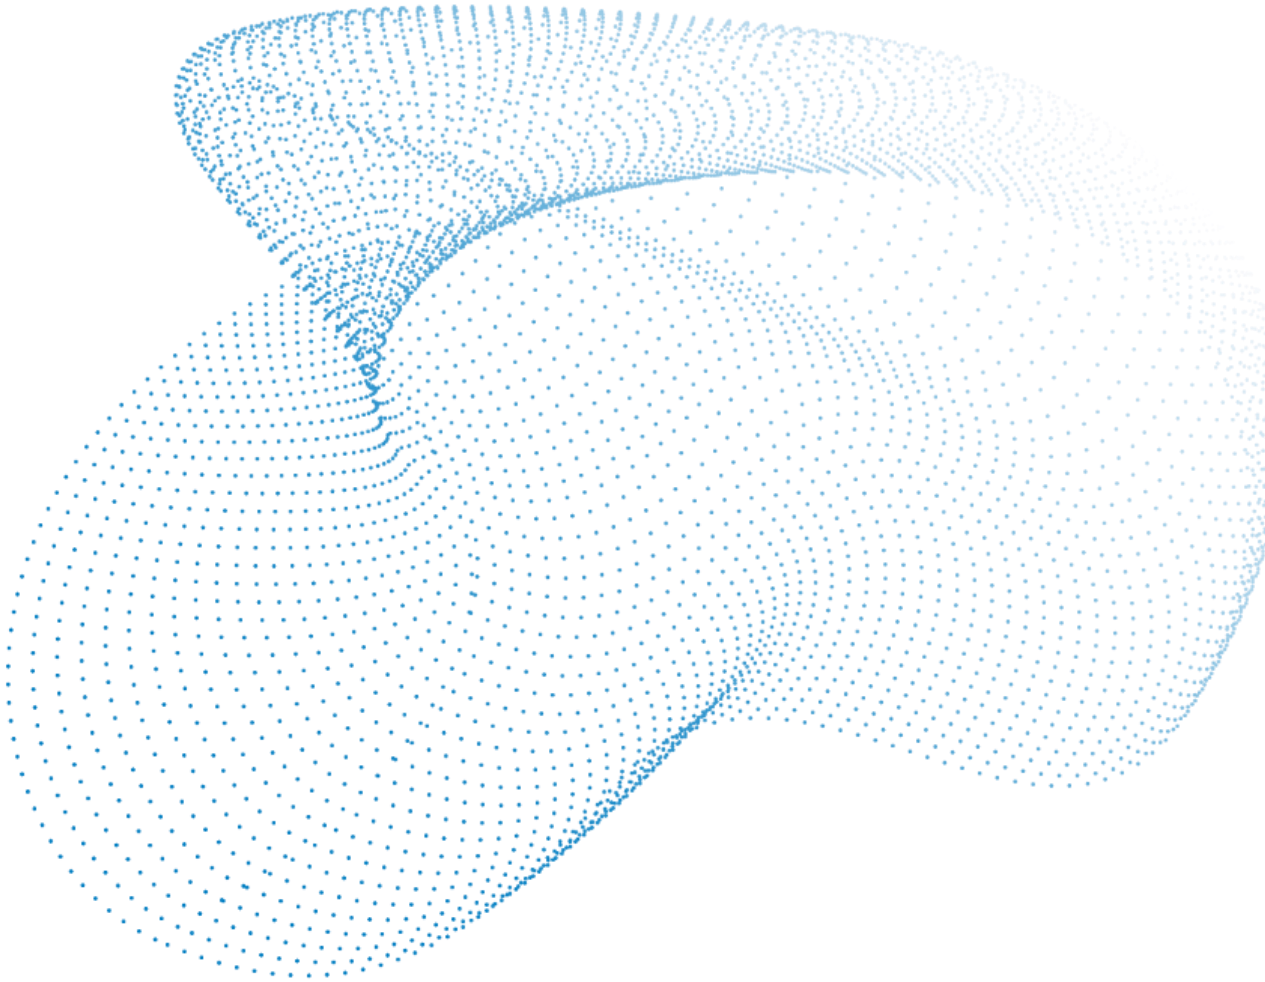

Creating and curating newsletters in Cogent

Steps to creating a newsletter:

- Start with the template
- Load the custom category “Feed” or “Task”
- Check for duplicates and relevancy
- Add articles and summaries/snippets
- Add also in articles

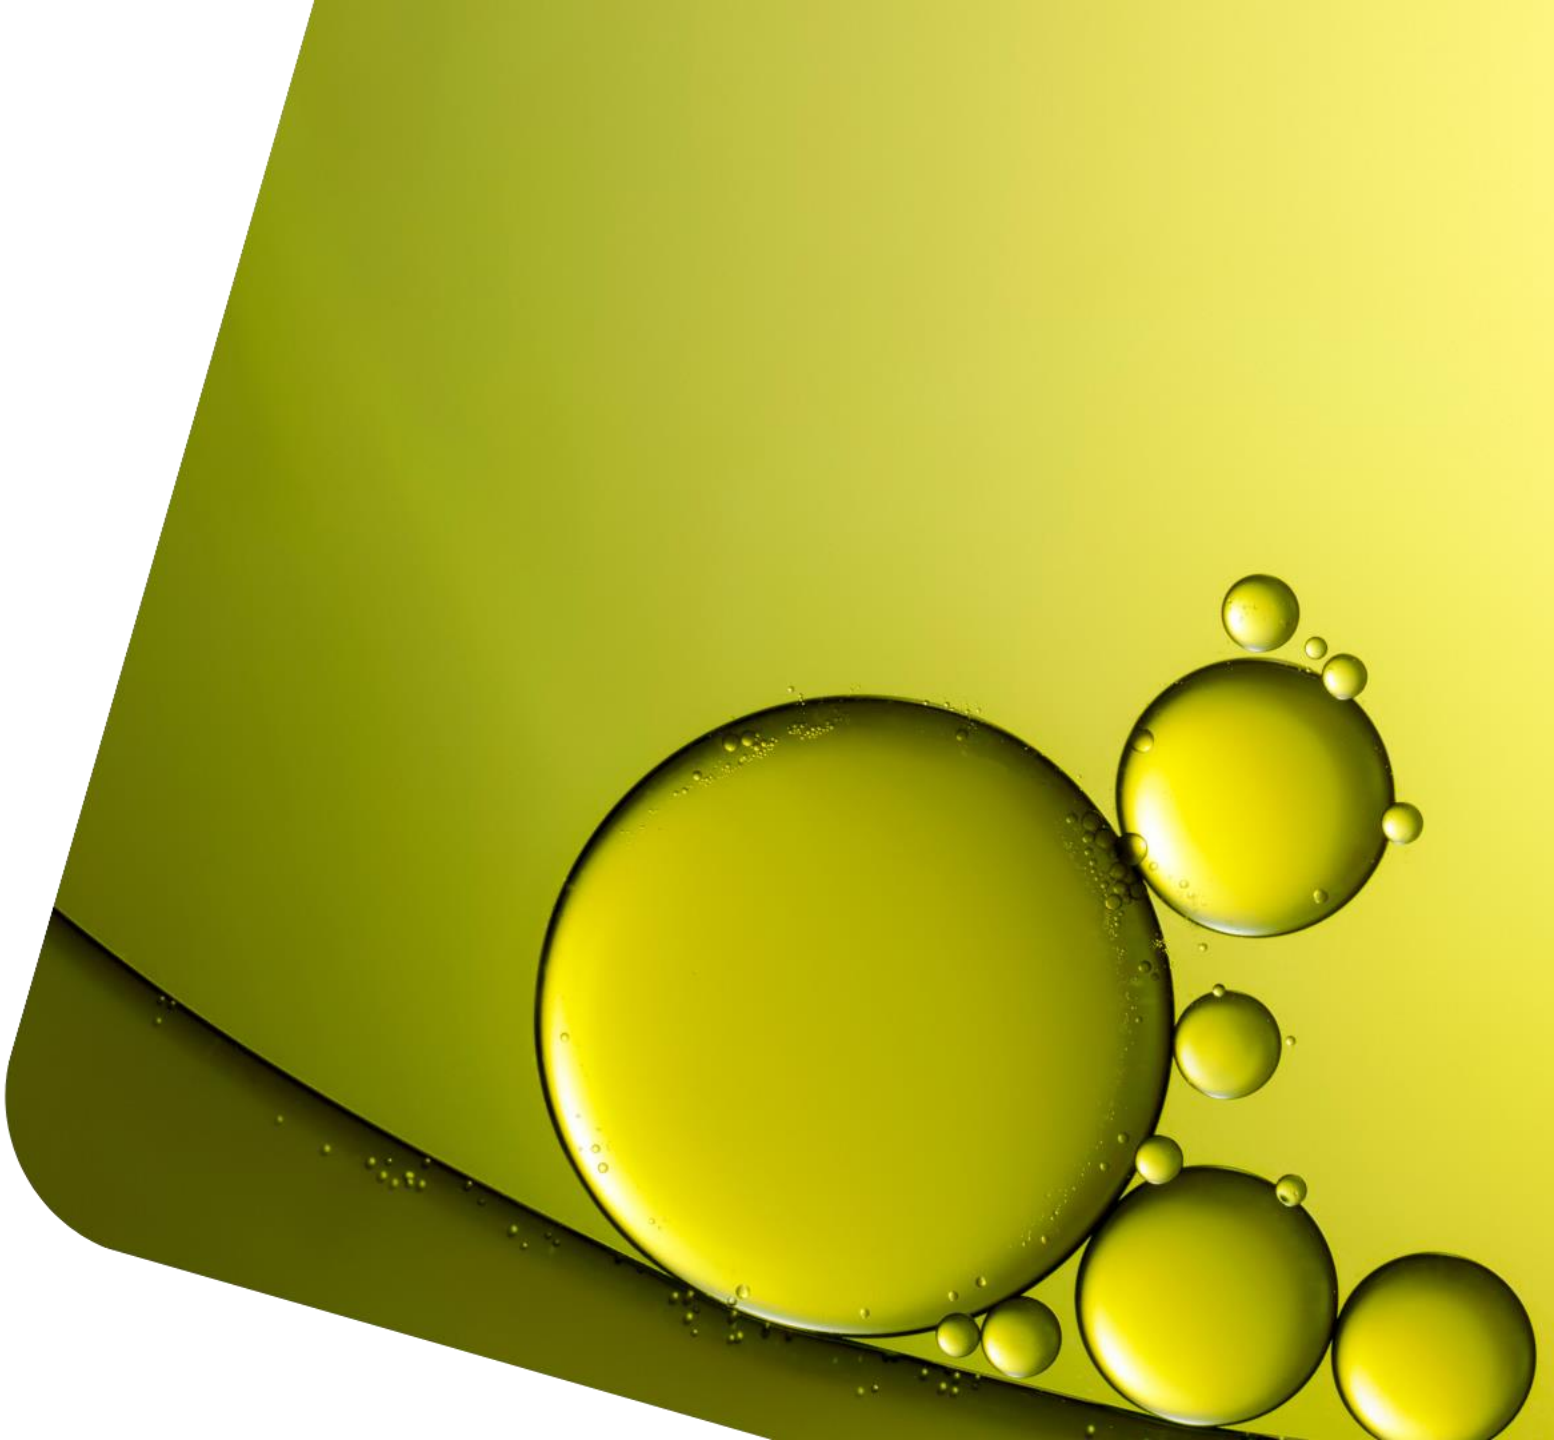

Useful tips:

- Work at the same time in both Newsletter view and Media Analysis view (where you can use the “Set to all” function and process big clusters of articles quickly).
- Article body search (ABS for short).

Writing summaries and snippets

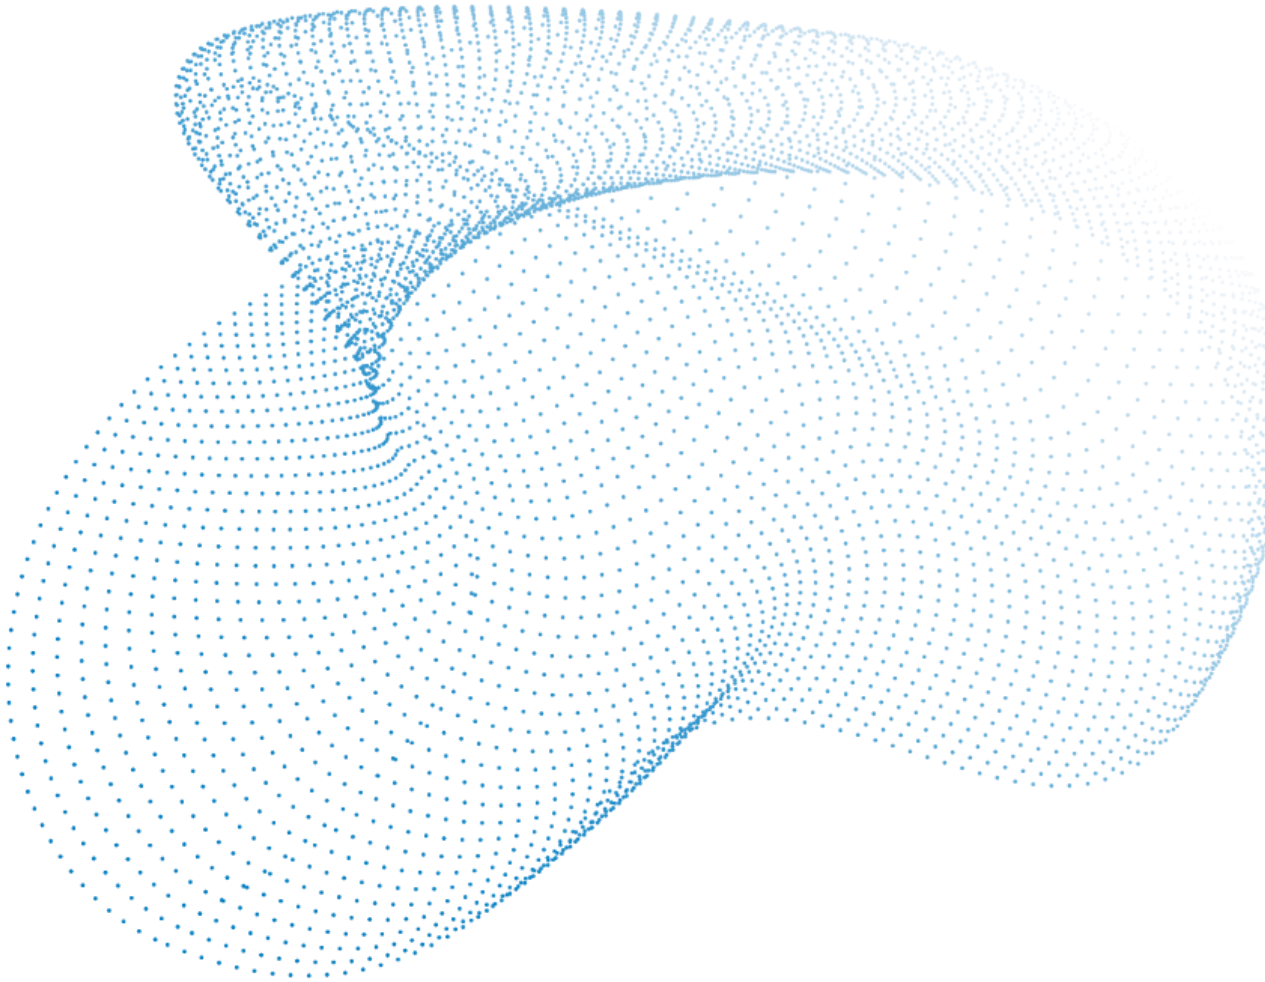

Summarizing coverage

Snippets are an exact copy of the key message in the article – usually, a few sentences, mentioning the client, competitor, or the monitored topic, which is the focus of the article.

Summaries provide a concise overview of the text's main points in our own words, focusing on the client and how they are mentioned and focusing on details defined by the client.

Top-level summaries provide brief highlights and insights into the media coverage for the monitored period. Some clients who receive newsletters covering a larger volume of articles may require a summary of the whole newsletter. The clients usually provide instructions with their preferences, what to focus on, what and how we should include in the summary.

We create snippets and summaries following the client’s needs and requirements and using basic constructs and guidelines, which we have compiled in a Guide available to all analysts.

Summarizing coverage

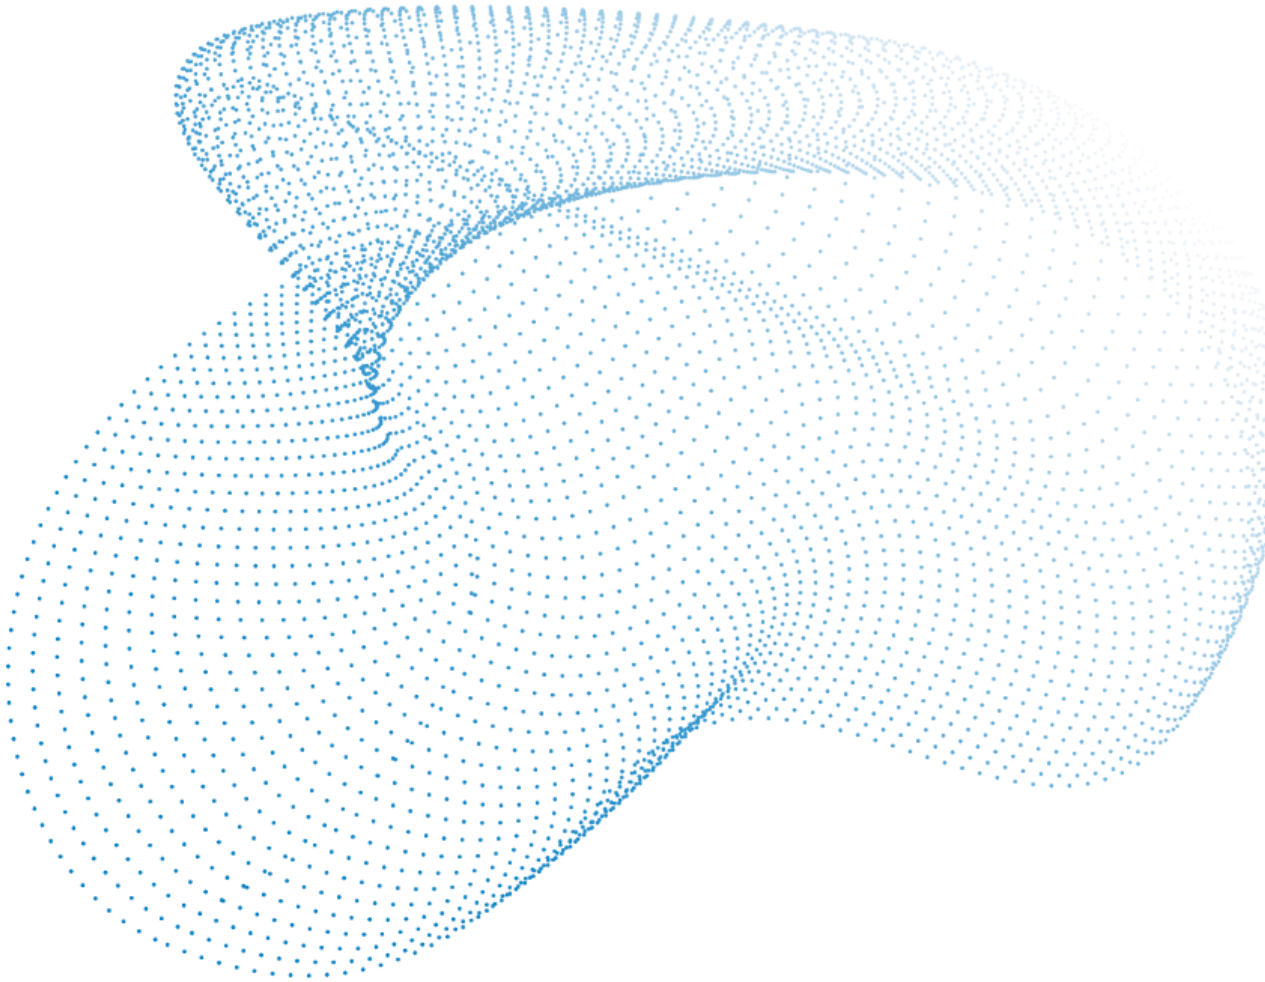

Tips for choosing a snippet from an article

- Focus on the mention of the client or topic of interest
- If there is a spokesperson or commentator quote, include it in the snippet, as this usually adds value to the client.
- If there are articles with similar text, make sure to choose a different example for each of the snippets to avoid repetition.
- If you are translating from another language to English, feel free to rephrase any sentences that lost meaning. If Google Translate is not accurate for the language you are translating from, try the DeepL Translator.

Tips when summarizing one or a few articles

- Summaries would normally be kept brief, with the length defined first and foremost by the client's requirements, the guidelines provided by the PM, our own judgment on how significant the news item is and the presence of a stakeholder quote. Do not waste time providing too much detail on small mentions of a topic.
- Most curated alerts employ forced present/present perfect tense. If the case at hand is different, we modify it accordingly.

Finalizing and sending newsletters

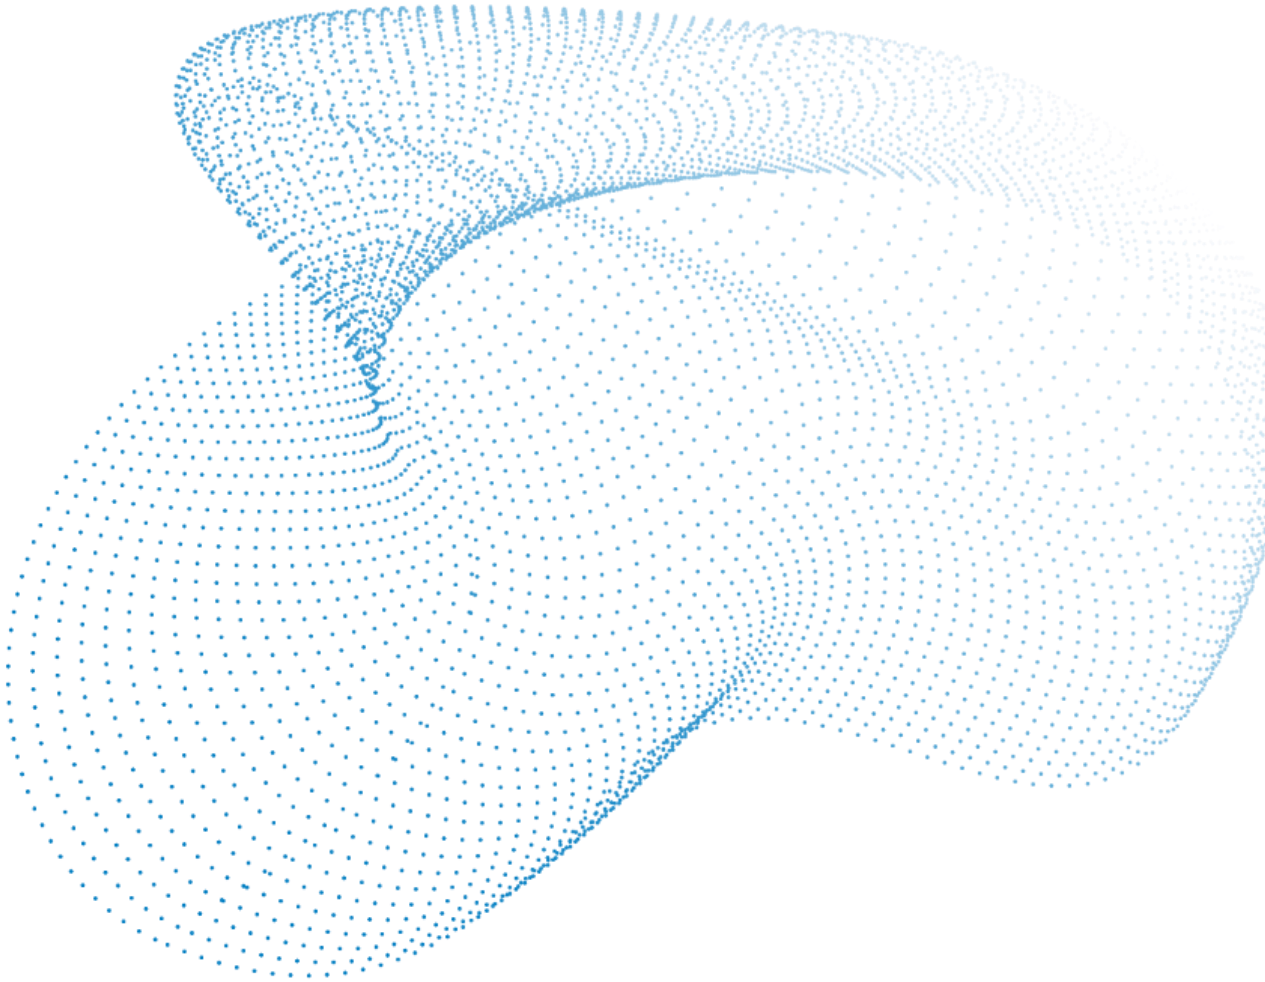

Steps for sending out a newsletter

After you have ensured that the quality check has been thoroughly executed, you can proceed to sending the newsletter.

- Check that the Sender field has the correct email address;
- Check the Recipients fields (To, CC or BCC);
- Make sure the title of the newsletter is accurate;
- Check any of the boxes below (for example, if you are including a Word or pdf version of the newsletter);
- Use the Preview option and go back to make corrections if needed.

If you are absolutely sure that the newsletter is ready, you can proceed to send it.
